This contract will secure the services of a consultant to determine the comprehensive value of solar electric generation units placed within the Austin Energy electric system. The contractor will also provide the methodology (ies) for Austin Energy to calculate the value of solar energy in future years. The use of solar energy will result in the following benefits: energy production, generating capacity, value of deferring distribution system upgrades, reduction in transformer and line losses, reactive power control, improved reliability of electric service, reduction in emissions and other benefits that may be identified during the course of this study.

This service is part of Austin Energy's desire to increase solar power in its community. This will be accomplished by installing 100 MW of solar facilities by 2020. Austin Energy is also interested in installing solar projects at local schools, libraries, community centers, and in the development of the nation's first affordable "net-zero energy" 100 home subdivision in southeast Austin.
